11 MAY 1988

Dear Mr. Gates,

I appreciate very much your willingness to participate in the annual Current Strategy Forum hosted by the Naval War College and sponsored by the Secretary of the Navy, 14-16 June 1988. As has been customary, the Secretary of the Navy will deliver the key-note address.

As the forum theme, we intend to focus on current developments in Soviet politics and external policies, the likely American influence on these developments, and the possible U.S. foreign policy and strategic responses to future Soviet behavior. The title for the forum will be "Sources of Soviet Conduct and the American Response: A Retrospective and a Perspective." The program will divide into three general topics:

- a. An evaluation of contemporary developments in Soviet society and the elements of change and continuity in Soviet foreign policy and military strategy.
- b. An examination of the possible impact of U.S. foreign and arms control policies and the U.S. military posture and maritime strategy on Soviet evaluations and behavior.
- c. A consideration of the challenges and opportunities that Soviet policies present to U.S. strategy and naval roles in the coming decade.

Critical problems facing the Soviet Union and recent changes in its leadership, as well as important U.S.-Soviet arms talks and agreements, suggest the aptness of the proposed forum focus. Most important, it is worth considering the implications of these developments for the naval services.

For the general plan of the program, we will have the following topics and speakers:

The forum will conclude by 12 noon.

We would like you to bring to bear your experiences and reflections on the general topic "The Gorbachev Era: Implications for U.S. Strategy" and define the details of your remarks as you think appropriate and as you have discussed with Dr. Robert Wood, Dean of the Center for Naval Warfare Studies.

I welcome your participation. As you can see, we have scheduled your lecture for Thursday, 16 June. We would invite you, however, to attend as much of the forum as your schedule allows. Please send a copy of your biography and your picture to Commander Ronald Wassel, U.S. Navy, Director of Special Events, at your earliest convenience. If you have any questions, please contact either Commander Wassel at 401/841-2271 or Dr. Wood at 401/841-2270.

Sincerely,

Ronald J. Kurth
